“ There was a day I was struggling and Ginny scooted her Walker chair into my room to share her concerns as well so we talked and we talked and then we joined hands in prayer. She told me of her childhood as well as her deep love for her children. I will forever hold these precious memories we shared and I'm glad the last words I heard out of your mouth were i love you also, this was the day before you left this world and I passed out some sweet candy that you enjoyed (puffy mints). I love you Virginia and until we meet again.

Gin was a good sister to me. She typically called me by my first and middle name, Loa Mae, or Baby Girl. I'm 73 now, but because I am the youngest of four sisters, she never stopped thinking of me that way, I guess.

I admired her for taking up oil painting in her 50s and taking on the organization of a school library, as well as serving as librarian. She was always proud of my accomplishments and told me so. We weren't close in age, and didn't grow up together, but she was a good sister and friend to me. I love you, Gin.
